Worksheet: Mental Health and Digital Well-Being (Chapter 11)

This worksheet will help you think about balancing online and offline life, handling social media pressure, spotting digital overload, and using social media in a healthy way. These quick activities are designed for teens like you to make sure your online presence doesn't mess with your happiness. Grab a pen, your phone, or a laptop, and let's make sure your brand—and your well-being—stay on point!

Part 1: Balancing Online and Offline Life

Let's think about how much time you spend online versus in the real world.

- Time Check: About how many hours do you spend online each day (social media, gaming, etc.)?
- Offline Win: What's one offline activity you enjoy (like sports, reading, or hanging with family)? How often do you do it?
- Balance Goal: Pick one way to add more offline time this week (e.g., "No phone during dinner" or "30 mins outside daily"). What will you try?

Part 2: Dealing with Social Media Pressure and Comparison

Social media can make you feel stressed or "less than." Let's tackle that!

- Comparison Moment: Think of a time social media made you feel bad about yourself (e.g., seeing someone's "perfect" life). What happened?
- Push Back Plan: What's one thing you can do to avoid comparison (e.g., "Unfollow accounts that stress me out")?

Part 3: Recognizing Signs of Digital Overload or Addiction

Are you too plugged in? Let's check for red flags.

- Self-Check: Do you ever lose track of time online, feel anxious without your phone, or skip IRL stuff to scroll? (Yes/No, give an example if yes)
- Fix It Idea: If you think you're overloaded, what's one small step to cut back (e.g., "No phone after 9 PM")?

Part 4: Strategies for Healthy Social Media Use

Let's make social media work for you, not stress you out.

- Healthy Habit: Pick one strategy from the chapter (like setting a time limit or turning off notifications). Which one will you try this week?
- Why It Helps: How do you think this strategy will improve your mood or free up time for other stuff?

Part 5: Reflection & Action Plan

Wrap up by thinking about how to keep your mental health strong while building your brand.

- Biggest Lesson: What's one thing from this chapter that made you rethink your online habits? (e.g., "I didn't realize how much time I waste scrolling")
- My Well-Being Goal for This Week: Pick one action from any section above to focus on. (e.g., "Limit social media to 2 hours a day")

Bonus Challenge (Optional): Take the action from your well-being goal and start it today or tomorrow! After a few days, jot down how it felt to make that change. Did you feel less stressed or more in control? If you're up for it, share your progress with a friend or family member for some extra support.

Note to Self: Your personal brand is awesome, but your mental health comes first! Keep this worksheet somewhere you can check back on it in a week to see how you're doing. Remember, small changes can make a big difference in staying happy and balanced online. You've got this—keep shining!
